Abstract:
Writing a scientific article is not only complex and demanding, it can be also frustrating. Many times, is difficult to find a successful path towards publication. Indeed, the scientific publishing ecosystem is complex and can be overwhelming. The aim of this workshop is to discuss with young scholars about the key publishing aspects from the editorial point of view, to help a successful publication process. The workshop will be interactive. Using mentimeter (www.mentimeter.com) we will induce a structured discussion along the reviewer and the editor points of view. These two different angles may help especially young scholars to better understand and manage a manuscript. The workshop is designed to be practical, providing guidelines for good practices and effective recommendations, as well as highlighting common errors and misunderstandings on the publishing process to be avoided. This workshop complements the authoring preconference workshop prepared by YESS. We encourage young scholars to engage in both activities to obtain the best of them.

Goals and objectives of the session:

• The editor’s perspective: what to do and what to avoid as the author of a manuscript
  o Tips for selecting a journal
  o Tips for structuring a good manuscript
  o Writing a good abstract
  o Avoiding common mistakes

• The reviewers’ perspective
- How to revise your paper
- Tips to answer the reviewers
- What is important and what is not

- The editorial process: getting along with the gatekeeper
  - What’s the role of the editor?
  - The editors understanding of a manuscript
  - The cover letter, does it matter?

Planned output / Deliverables:
The workshop will provide guidelines to help in successful publication in scientific journals.
